Traditional residential communities manage the natural potential of Holbung Hill so that it attracts the attention of many tourists. Some communities began to make trails for hiking trails, clearing the long grass, and cleaning livestock manure. The village government realizes that Holbung Hill, one of the most favorite tourist destinations, is a source of income for Hariarapohan Village, located at the foot of the hill. The government formed a village-owned business entity to manage and develop the Bukit Holbung tourist destination.

The people of Hariarapohan Village, who live at the foot of the mountain, make Holbung Hill not a place for recreation but a place for buffalo to eat. Holbung Hill has wide green grass, so the people of Hariarapohan village bring their livestock to graze in that place or their farmers who look for green grass and take them home to eat livestock. After several years passed, the villagers began to realize that Holbung Hill had natural potential that could be developed as a feature typical of the village.

Farming is one of the professions of hope for the community in the traditional settlements of Hariarapohan Village in Bukit Holbung. People in Holbung Hill produce agricultural products to feed their families, so they always find the best place to sell their products yearly. The farmers, therefore, are the founders of human civilization. When tillage begins, other arts follow.
